How to Help Your Children With Their Homework?

Create a homework-friendly zone

Make sure your children have a well-lit area in which to do their homework. Maintain easy access to supplies such as paper, pencils, glue, and scissors

Establish a regular study time

Some children work best in the afternoon, after a snack and play period. Others might prefer to postpone until after dinner

Assist them in developing a strategy

Encourage your child to divide the work into manageable portions. Make a nighttime work schedule if necessary. If possible, take a 15-minute break every hour

Reduce as many distractions as possible

This includes no television, loud music, or phone calls

Ensure that children complete their own homework

Parents can make suggestions and offer advice. It is the responsibility of a child to learn

Be a motivator as well as a monitor

Inquire about homework, quizzes, and tests. Encourage, check completed homework, and be available for questions and concerns

Lead by example

Children are more likely to emulate their parents than to take their advice

Recognize and appreciate their efforts

Display an ace test or art project on the fridge

Search information of the given plants and write in scrap book

Plants can live in jungles, deserts, and almost everywhere else you can think of. Let's explore some examples of plants, their habitats, and how they survive.

Aloe Plants

- They grow well in dry, arid places.
- Their fleshy stems, leaves, and roots allow them to store much water.
- The thick waxy coating on their leaves helps prevent excessive moisture loss.

Baobab Trees

- They survive in low-lying, arid regions.
- Their spongy trunk allows them to store up to 100,000 liters of water.
- Some varieties have slick and shiny bark that reflects light and keep them cool.

Conifer Trees

- They can survive the harsh and freezing winters.
- Their long, needle-like leaves have waxy coatings that reduce moisture loss.
- They also produce cones instead of flowers.

Mangroves

- Mangrove trees sit in swampy, salty, and oxygen-poor environments all year.
- To ensure they get enough oxygen, they grow roots upward out of the soil.
